possibly renew the objection started by Wankang, but it will not really hold water, simply because, if they decide to establish a Mint, the common people will give up their prejudices in a short time, and the leading native merchants are now too much inclined to the advantages which would accrue to them in the event of the establishment of a Mint, which it is to be hoped they may be induced to do, the question of dollars versus taels would probably drop up. Into the merits of that question we do not now, however, propose to go. It would require a great deal of consideration, and need not affect the proposal that the Chinese should establish a Mint. Japan has already set the example, with excellent results. With that precedent before them, the Chinese Government need not feel any doubt as to the success of the experiment.

The selection of a site for the new Central School has lately been occupying the attention of the Government. As is well known, the site of the present is not large enough for the contemplated buildings, and on some accounts the land adjoining is not eligible. The school could certainly be built there, but at some expense of appearance, space, and comfort. Locally the site is undoubtedly good as far as the convenience of the scholars is concerned, but it may be doubted whether it is not rather more close and confined than is desirable for such an institution. It may be argued that the scholars have enjoyed good health there, and that the masters have not had very much reason to complain on that score, but that is really no reason why, if a more airy and less limited site can be obtained, it should not be chosen. Such an one exists on the Bonham Road, just above the new site for the Government Civil Hospital. There is plenty of space and the ground is comparatively level. If anywhere, a plot of ground could be secured on this site, which is certainly a consideration not to be lost sight of. This is a provision which has been contended for with great earnestness by the Head Master, and one which every well-wisher of the institution would like to see guaranteed. We understand, however, that the gentleman most interested in the matter does not favour the selection of the site just mentioned, though on what his objections are based has not transpired. Possibly he thinks it less central and that the transfer of the school to a low locality might operate prejudicially against it by making it less accessible to the Chinese. If this surmise be correct, there is not much force in the objection; for the site on Bonham Road is neither remote from the centre of Taipingian nor difficult of access. There are two or three roads within a few yards' distance which lead straight down into the most thickly populated districts of the Chinese town. The scholars would have no difficulty in finding their way to the school wherever it is erected, and, unless some cogent reason for adhering to the old site or its neighbourhood is advanced, the Government cannot do better than choose one in the locality above mentioned.

Our Majesty's ship Vigilant returned from Canton last evening with Admiral Ryder on board.

By kind permission of Captain Bristol, Divine Service will be held on board the Stephens to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock. All hands will be invited to the service, and the harbour to collect those wishing to attend.

By the German steamship Alona we learn that the news of the steaming of the steamer Genoa, which passed here, the Alona did not then arrive at Cape St. James, and the French mail steamer was still at Saigon when the Alona left.

The Council of the Oxford University have at last notified the proclamation of a statute to provide for the appointment of the Rev. James L. D. of the University of Oxford, as Professor of Chinese. The appointment of the Chair will consist of the interest of £3,000, which "certain persons interested in promoting the study of Chinese" have agreed to contribute. The Council of the University have decided to establish a Chair of Chinese, which it is to be hoped they may be induced to do, the question of dollars versus taels would probably drop up.
